

Incumbents opposed in Tuesday's election

Two Canyon city commissioners seek re-election against two opponents Tuesday during an election which began with virtually no issues but which has been spurred by controversy over construction of a new city hall complex.

Incumbents Jim Christopher and H. R. Fulton Jr. will face opponents on the ballot when the polls open Tuesday morning.

Christopher is challenged on the ballot by Mr. C. S. Thompson and Fulton is challenged by Charles Sykes.

A heavier-than-usual voter turnout is predicted for the city election which historically has drawn fewer than 1000 voters to the polls.

Absentee balloting ended Friday afternoon with only two persons casting absentee votes.

The polls open at 8 a.m. Tuesday and voting will continue until 7 p.m. at the Canyon community center, across from the police department in the city.

Incumbent Mayor Manly Bryan drew no opposition in his bid for re-election and his name will be on the ballot unopposed.

More than 5000 persons are eligible to vote in the city election.

The vote will be accomplished on paper ballots. No other issues are on the ballot for the election.

Canyon city commissioners will canvass the votes and certify the election during their Tuesday night meeting. They will meet at 7 p.m. at the city hall annex to conduct routine business.

Those selected by the voters from Tuesday's slate will take office at the next regular city commission meeting in April.

Persons who have not previously registered to vote are not eligible to vote in the Tuesday city race.

City Clerk Bob Moore produced figures last week which indicate few of Canyon's eligible voters go to the polls in city elections.

Reviewing statistics for the past 10 years in city elections, Moore noted that in 1964 only 86 votes were cast. The number fell to 63 votes cast in the 1965 election but rose to 255 voters in 1966.

The number rose again in 1967 with 471 casting ballots, in 1968 with 613 voting and 1969 with 829 casting votes.

An all-time record number of voters went to the polls in 1970 when 1133 persons cast ballots. The number dropped significantly in 1971 when only 69 persons went to the polls on election day.

In 1972, 95 persons cast ballots and in 1973, a total of 492 persons voted.

Construction of a new $1.2 million civic center complex for the city has emerged as the main campaign issue for this year's election and could stir voter interest at the polls.

The complex has been the focal point of two petitions signed by local citizens calling for a citizens vote on whether or not the building should be constructed.

The candidates in the city election express their views on various issues in another story in today's Sunday News.

Christopher, a local real estate man, has served on the commission for several years.

Fulton, owner of a local florist shop, has served longer than any other incumbent on the commission.

Sykes is an employee of a local garage and Mrs. Thompson is operator of a laundry and dry cleaning firm in the city.

Buffalo Lake Manager Paul Ferguson examines tomato and pepper plants which have taken root and are growing well in soil taken from the dry lake bottom. Ferguson is experimenting on growth of crops in the dry lake bed. The crop planting program is designed to remove nutrients from the soil, so water may once again be returned to the dry lake.

Poff nixes three articles, okays three in proposed constitution

State Rep. Bryan Poff of Canyon said Friday he has voted against three of the six articles considered so far in Austin to go into a new state constitution.

Poff, serving as a delegate to the Constitutional Convention which is rewriting Texas' antiquated constitution, said the inclusion of various sections in the articles caused him to cast "against" ballots on the three major articles.

The convention, which voted tentatively last week to adjourn Friday and resume the deliberations following the May primary elections, has approved and completed an Education Article, Executive Article, Finance Article, Rights and Suffrage Article, Bill of Rights and Constitutional Amendment Article.

The convention, when it resumes activities following the primary elections, must consider the Judiciary Article, Separation of Powers Article, General Provisions Article, Legislative Article and possibly the Local Government Article.

Poff said the convention will take up the Local Government Article again Monday after several days of discussion last week.

This area's representative said he feels the convention is making good progress on the proposed document which is to be submitted to Texans for a vote next fall.

He said not much change is being wrought in the final proposals when compared to the Texas Constitutional Revision Commission proposal. And, he said, the new articles emerging from general floor debate are strikingly similar to provisions in the old 1887 Texas constitution.

Poff said he voted against the Education Article when it came up for floor debate because "it didn't take good enough care of universities other than those in the University of Texas system."

Poff said the funding section placed in the article to provide financing for colleges and universities outside the UT and Texas A&M systems will give inadequate sums of money to help upgrade facilities at those colleges.

The special provision for colleges and universities outside the UT and TAMU system calls for a $31 million fund to be used by universities for construction and supplies.

Yet, Poff said, the Permanent University Fund, which was retained in the Education Article, will increase rapidly in future years in terms of money available for UT and TAMU expansions. Money available in the fund for other universities will not increase.

"I wanted both funds tied together so they both would grow," Poff said.

Poff said he also voted against the Finance Article, but the decision to vote "no" was not an easy one.

He said he favored the inclusion in the article of an exemption for persons 65 years of age and older on taxation, but also favored a definite limitation on the amount the state can tax

Sewer rates same, some H₂O rates up

Water rates for the city's commercial customers and for a few residential customers will rise in April.

But, sewer rates for the city's customers will not go up. The News erred Thursday in reporting sewer rates have been hiked by city commissioners.

In considering the 1974-75 city budget, commissioners increased water rates for commercial customers from 30 cents to 35 cents per 1000 gallons and for residential customers who use more than 15,000 gallons of water per month, from 25 cents to 35 cents per 1000 gallons.

City residential water customers who do not use 15,000 gallons or more per month will face no rate increase.

City Manager George Louder said the new rates will be reflected on bills received by local customers in early May or late April.

In addition, this month will begin an 8.8 per cent salary hike for all city employees. The cost-of-living increase has also been okayed by commissioners.

The 8.8 per cent hike could be only part of a potential wage increase anticipated by city commissioners following completion of a wage and salary survey now being conducted.

A representative of Public Administration Services, which has contracted with the Panhandle Regional Planning Commission to study wage levels in various regional towns, was in Canyon Thursday to meet with all city employees to rewrite job descriptions and compile in-

Phillips, plant services manager for the Borger plant, spoke Friday morning to students of economics at West Texas State University.

He said several myths have been given common circulation by government and news media and then told the industry's story concerning the myths.

One such myth, he said, is that the oil companies conspired to create the oil shortage.

"I personally find it incredible anyone would consider this believable," Phillips said. "To do so, they would have to believe the oil industry is for the continued control of the price at the well heads, for the cessation of drilling off the coast of California, and for the delay in the Alaska pipeline."

Another myth receiving widespread circulation, Phillips said, is that the oil industry has enjoyed excessive profits as a result of the fuel crisis.

Phillips charged that proponents of this view have chosen to compare the relatively high profits of 1973 for the industry with the very low profits returned during 1972. Profits in 1972, he said, were the lowest in 10 years for the industry.

Historically, he said, oil companies have enjoyed profits in the middle-range when compared to other industries.

The fuel crisis, Phillips said, is really a money crisis and the crunch focuses on the fact that oil companies must make a reasonable return on their investments before they can sink money into exploration for oil.

The companies must make more money than they have in the past so they can step up

(See OIL, page 8)

Optimistic reports from Washington concerning the fuel crisis have failed to dent the reality of the gasoline shortage situation in Canyon, local service station owners said last week as they watched their supplies dwindle.

The future for local operators is not as optimistic, either, as the national reports would indicate.

Local operators term the supply of gas in the city "poor," and say they don't know whether the situation will improve in April.

At least two local service stations were closed during the latter part of last week due to the lack of gasoline. Others feared they might have to close this weekend.

All contacted last week viewed President Nixon's lifting of the ban on Sunday gasoline sales as

Commission candidates agree on need for vote

On the eve of a Tuesday city election which pits two incumbent commissioners against challengers, News interviews last week revealed that all candidates for the two council seats favor a vote of the people on the controversial city hall complex issue.

Incumbents Jim Christopher and H. R. Fulton Jr. and challengers Charles Sykes and Mrs. C. S. Thompson agree the citizens of Canyon should be allowed to vote on whether they want the city to build a $1.2 million civic center complex.

The issue has been of major concern recently as several citizens circulated petitions calling for the vote.

The four candidates agree, too, that no vote should be taken before all the facts concerning construction costs and financing are available to the public.

Incumbent Christopher said after the city's architects present completed plans and costs estimates to commissioners on April 15 he will favor "as many town hall meetings as the people will come to" to disseminate all information concerning costs and financing for construction of the complex.

"I feel this way," Christopher said. "In this type of community project all the people are entitled to have a say-so and that I'm certainly for the people having a vote after everything is in."

Christopher's opponent on the ballot, Mrs. Thompson, said she too favors a vote on the issue but only after the facts are all in on construction and financing costs.

Fulton favors the vote.

"It's evident the majority want a vote and I feel when the facts are known they'll overwhelmingly approve it," he said. "We should call it at the time the facts are available and not before. I don't think any commissioner ever expressed any feeling against the vote."

Sykes, who challenges Fulton for his place on the commission, said he favors the vote after the facts are in.

While Christopher and Fulton are avowedly for construction of the new complex, their challengers have some hesitation about the need for the full complex as planned.

Christopher and Fulton noted that the city's current library is located in a World War II vintage barracks, the fire station is located in a 70-year-old building which is itself a fire hazard, the police department is in an old lumber company building and that city hall is in an antiquated building with inadequate storage and personnel facilities.

"In view of these, I sincerely believe we do need a new building to house the aforementioned facilities," Christopher said.

"I feel like if anybody even investigated the fire department, the deplorable condition of the library and city hall, it would be self-evident that it's (the complex) way past due," Fulton said.

Sykes said the library "is in sad shape," but questioned the need for a new fire department. He cited the need for more room in the city hall itself.

Mrs. Thompson said she sees a real need for improvement in the fire department and library facilities. But, she said the project needs more study before anything is built. And, she's suspicious that city residents have not been told the truth concerning financing of the complex.

The incumbents, Christopher and Fulton, note that the city's financial picture is good and that excess funds from a large water fund surplus, plus federal revenue sharing money will provide financing for the construction of the complex.

Mrs. Thompson said she opposes the use of federal revenue sharing money because the use of that money cuts off other available federal funds which might be used for other projects.

Sykes said more facts need to be known about the financing of the project.

Water For The Future

The candidates also focused on other problems which the city faces or may face in the future.

Christopher and Fulton note that a study conducted last summer reveals that with the current wells, the city has a 20-year supply of water even with growth factors taken into consideration.

Christopher said the city has, and should continue, to look for other water rights which could prolong that supply figure.

Fulton noted that the city has also contacted

Our World

Health In Happy Home

By ANN BROWN

Psychiatrists generally agree that pressure is the basic cause of mental and emotional breakdowns, and many physical illnesses — including accidental injuries.

It is not always one traumatic shock that destroys one's ability to function, however. An accumulation of small pressures can be just as effective.

According to Dr. Thomas H. Holmes, a psychiatrist at the University of Washington School of Medicine in Seattle, the death of one's mate can create the greatest life change and cause more emotional stress than any other experience.

Death can sometimes be avoided, but eventually it catches up with everyone. Dr. Holmes also points out that the next heaviest emotional impact is dealt by divorce and marital separation.

Divorce and separation can be avoided — if both partners are willing to do their best to make the home a happy one.

Considering the eternal consequences in the lives of children involved in broken homes, what more rewarding work can parents do than build happy homes?

Financial troubles deal an emotional blow close behind that of death, divorce, and disease.

One's financial level seems to make little difference; there are miserable beggars and billionaires — also happy ones. It's debts that put the pressure on. The size of the debt matters little; it's the ability to pay it that determines the pressure.

Death, a certain amount of friction in the home, and some financial pressure cannot be avoided. And because certain pressures are inevitable, it is essential to our mental health to avoid all the unnecessary stress possible.

Dr. Hans Selye is a world-renowned authority on stress. In the February Reader's Digest, he recommended four words to live by if one wants to live successfully.

Dr. Selye says that hate causes stress, and love alleviates it. The key to happiness, says the doctor, is to earn your neighbor's love.

The most important "neighbors," of course, are your closest ones: your companion and your children. How many times do you deliberately plan ways to please your family?

What pleases one person may very well antagonize another. So if we seriously want to earn our neighbors' love, we need to spend time and effort learning their needs, hopes, and desires.

The man who impulsively sends his wife flowers, and plans to take her out to dinner may be rebuffed by a tired woman who resents his spending money they need to pay bills.

Many wives might appreciate husbands who get home a little early, help with dinner and wash the dishes afterward, take the children out to play — or put them to bed — more than they would an evening out they could not afford.

A wife, however, who wants to earn her husband's love will graciously accept whatever gesture he makes that is obviously for her pleasure.

A happy man can earn more money. Deflating his ego can decrease his earning power.

The wives who are constantly complaining that their husbands cannot earn enough money to support them are probably right.

Any man who has to live with a complaining woman, or work under the pressure of continual disparagement is not likely to be very productive.

Parents who do not try to earn each other's love, have little chance of earning the love of their children.

If Dr. Selye is correct that hate creates stress, and love alleviates it, the most important service a mother can render her children is to love their father — and vice versa.

The right kind of home can provide insulation to protect the members against all outside pressures.

A stressful home can strip one of emotional defenses until he becomes accident prone, and a ready prey for every type of illness.

Various legislators are demanding national health insurance. The best health insurance anyone can have is a happy home — and it doesn't cost the taxpayers a cent.

Move To Middle

By CARROLL WILSON

In recent years, Americans have complained that there is virtually no difference between the political candidates of the two major parties.

Most Americans saw little difference between the major contenders in 1968, for example. There have been exceptions. Obviously, there was a chasm of difference between Goldwater and Johnson in '64 and between Nixon and McGovern in '72.

Therein lies the truth of the thesis of the authors of a political science handbook called The Real Majority.

The authors point out that there is a majority opinion on most issues. And, they point out that to win an election, the candidates must appeal to that majority. Thus, both candidates must adopt similar techniques and must mouth similar phrases to capture virtually the same vote.

Under the book's thesis, the major races usually boil down to popularity contests.

The authors point out that Goldwater in '64 either failed to recognize the real majority in the country or, recognizing them, failed to understand how to deal with them. As a result, he lost by a landslide.

That's precisely what happened.

As a result of the truism recognized in The Real Majority, we see the phenomenon of George Wallace coming toward the center and portraying himself these days as no racist.

The same phenomenon is at work on the local level in the city races set for Tuesday.

All four candidates recognize that the majority of Canyon's residents want a vote on the construction of a city hall complex.

Thus, they have all moderated and moved toward the center in an effort to capture the votes.

The city hall issue is diffused for the Tuesday election. All candidates agree the citizenry should be allowed to vote on the issue.

With varying degrees of enthusiasm, they all agree — with the possible exception of Mrs. C. S. Thompson — that a civic center or something like it is needed.

The issue is no issue for the Tuesday balloting as far as the average voter is concerned.

Frankly, before the complex issue raised its head, there was no real issue in the campaign.

Challenger Charles Sykes came closer than anyone in the campaign to raising a real issue and he has not pursued it. Sykes began his campaign contending that the average working man should have a voice in city government, noting that Canyon's commissioners are probably in the middle to middle-high income brackets.

Challenger Mrs. Thompson has cast about for an issue to take hold of and has grabbed the civic center, which is no longer an issue.

Incumbents H. R. Fulton Jr. and Jim Christopher naturally don't want to see many issues raised.

The voters on Tuesday will find themselves, then, contemplating other factors in the city race, factors like experience, personality and enthusiasm.

Hopefully, though the issue is defunct, the controversy surrounding construction of the city hall complex will get out a large vote on Tuesday.

All too frequently in Canyon's history, men have been placed on the commission with only a handful of voters balloting.

Madison believed the people not really able to govern themselves. Perhaps he was right, not in the sense that the people are not smart enough to govern themselves, but in the sense that they too often don't give a damn about governing themselves.

Vote Tuesday.

Letter To The Editor

Questions On New City Complex

Dear Editors:

I have some questions concerning the proposed city complex that so far have not been answered.

1. Are the city commissioners going to stand with their bare faces hanging out and say if objections had not been raised they would have said, "Here is our proposal and we want the people of Canyon to vote on it?"

2. Did the Canyon News get the $1.5 million and now the $1.2 million figure out of thin air?

3. If we keep on talking about this and signing the petitions will the cost estimates continue to go down?

4. Could it be that Mrs. Parker and others who are asking to vote on this issue have opened a can of worms?

Why else would they be the recipients of such rude behavior?

at Monday night's budget hearing?

5. If there is no danger of our taxes being raised (also water and sewer rates) why don't the commissioners make these figures available for publication?

They are bound to know how much surplus money this town has, and our present city debts, and when and how they are to be retired.

6. And last — Why hasn't anyone looked into buying the Neblett Hospital building and using it and the city property around it for the complex; if indeed one is needed?

After all when the new hospital is finished, that large and still usable building will be vacant.

Sincerely yours,
Vivian Kay Madewell

The University Interscholastic League Literary Contest was held at West Texas State University Saturday. High school students from District 1-AAA and District 3-AAAA competed in the various categories.

District 1-AAA includes schools from Canyon, Muleshoe, Levelland, Perryton and Dumas. District 3-AAAA schools are from Amarillo, Borger and Pampa.

Jack Edmondson, Director of the Public Services at WTSU, was coordinator of the overall contest.

The university, as a service to area high school students, houses and directs the contest each year. The winners in the Saturday contest are to be traveling out of town in about two weeks to the regional contest. The regional winners will go on to the state competition.

Contestants from Canyon High School were John Watkins, and David Finke for boys debate; Christi Prichard for girls in-Maternal grandparents are Mr. and Mrs. Bill Rudd of Rt. 4, Canyon, and paternal grandparents are Mrs. Virginia Dyson of Canyon and Glenn Dyson of Denton.

Chamber To Eye Special Coins

Directors of the Canyon Chamber of Commerce will discuss issuance of a commemorative coin program during regular session Monday night.

The directors meet at 7:30 p.m. at the community center.

Directors are also expected to discuss promotion of residential and business development of the city and possible promotion of a sales campaign for Canyon merchants during the summer.

Ticket sales for the circus which will be sponsored by the chamber on May 15 will also be discussed.

Sales Tax Check Up To $25,000

The City of Canyon received $25,062 from the 1 per cent sales tax levied for the fourth quarter of 1973. City Manager George Louder said Thursday.

The tax return check is an increase of about 28 per cent over the check received for the same quarter in 1972.

It is down somewhat from the $33,000 check received by the city for the quarter ending in September 1973. That check included, however, an $11,000 penalty and interest charge against a local business for non-payment of the tax.

Canyon Boy Scout Clean-Up Can Drive Ends Today

The Canyon Boy Scout Clean-Up Can Drive was topped off this weekend with a display at the Scout-O-Rama at the Civic Center in Amarillo Saturday.

The Canyon troops that have been collecting cans from the city area for several weeks, featured a poster exhibition of the clean-up campaign, and a can smashing device.

The posters all dealt with recycling and ecology. The can smashing device was available for the public use. The device was designed by Major L. D. Truitt of the Military Science Department at West Texas State University. It consisted of an old Army boot on the end of a heavy pipe. According to Scoutmaster John Grillo, the purpose of the machine was to show that can smashing is a "very physical" thing, and to promote activity on the part of the spectators.

Today is the last day for cans to be delivered to the Boy Scouts for re-cycling. Collection point for the empty cans has been at the Alpha Tau Omega fraternity house on Hicks Road.

Grillo said that the minimum of the can collection will probably run to about 5000 cans. All the cans will be taken to the Coors Distributing Plant in Amarillo for re-cycling. The money paid for the cans will go to the Boy Scouts.

Grillo said the Boy Scouts are anxious to know if the cleaner difference on the Canyon landscape is noticed, but that they feel the effort was "certainly worth it" regardless of public attention.

Police Chief Graduates

Canyon Police Chief Al Stewart will return to the city this week after graduating last week from the 96th session of the FBI National Academy at Quantico, Va.

Stewart graduated along with 248 other class members Thursday during ceremonies in Virginia.

He attended 12 weeks of executive level training in law enforcement during the academy. The curriculum included topics such as police ethics, police management, behavioral sciences, recent court decisions and urban police problems.

Police Lt. Tom Rolan has been acting chief since Stewart's departure.

Russian Film To Be Shown At Calvary Church

A showing of an Underground Evangelism Production, "To Russia With Love," will be held at the Calvary Baptist Church tonight at 7 p.m.

Many of the shots in the film were made inside Russia and according to the production agency, "give eloquent testimony to the fact that hunger for the Word of God is very real in that land of multiple closed churches."

Secret arrangements were made in advance for an English speaking Russian Christian to rendezvous with the agency photographer in Russia, and the two spent several weeks in the capture of a "revealing glimpse of the underground church at worship."

The showing at the Calvary Baptist Church tonight is open to the public.

its residents.

Poff said he feels a proposal he and another delegate presented which would have set a ceiling on the amount the state could tax would have been a logical partner in the article with a section which limits state spending.

Poff's amendment would have limited state taxes.

"If you can ever get a set ceiling on the maximum tax rate all else will take care of itself," he said. "Our position was that if we have a limit on state spending we should have a limit on state taxation."

Poff said he likewise voted against the article on rights and suffrage because of a section which allows felons to vote after they've served their penitentiary time.

"I didn't think a felon should automatically be given his rights back," Poff said.

He said the provision is inequitable because the felon on parole or on probation cannot get his rights back until he has served his complete time. Yet, a felon can assume his rights after serving penitentiary time.

Poff said the least controversial of the articles approved for inclusion in the constitution so far by the convention has been the article on the executive branch of government.

He said the article includes no great changes over the current constitutional provisions.

Main features of the new article are the governor's power to reorganize the branch and his power to dismiss appointive officials with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Looking to the immediate future, Poff said the local government article will face some opposition in home rule provisions. The article's committee voted recently to have the county home rule provision submitted separately to voters for consideration.

He said the convention voted Friday to return to the article the constitutional four-year terms for office-holders.

The remainder of the proposed article, he said, follows closely the Constitutional Revision Commission proposal.

Poff said the convention is bracing for "a big fight" on the Legislative Article.

"Everybody's an expert," Poff said. "On finance, not everybody understands that completely. But, we all know about the legislature. It'll really be quite a fight."

The Judiciary Article is not yet out of committee, he said, and will probably face some problems when it emerges for floor debate.

Poff predicted that the article finally approved for the judiciary will closely reveal today's system with county courts, district courts and courts of appeals changed only slightly.

He said he foresees no significant change in the county court provisions. The CRC proposed that all county judges must be attorneys, but Poff said he doubts delegates will go for that section.

Shortage. . .

"Martin charged that the government rather than the oil companies are to blame for the continued gasoline shortage.

The government has established mandatory allocations for each oil company based on the same month last year.

Martin said Gulf representatives indicate the oil company has an ample supply of gasoline but cannot get it to its dealers due to the federal allocation system.

He said he sees little room for optimism based on the end of the Arab oil embargo because American refineries will not be able to meet the capacity anyway.

Local service station operators said their major company representatives are being closed-mouthed about the future of the oil shortage.

"The representatives don't know for sure," Martin said. "They hope for relief but they're not positive about anything."

Shortage. . .

Bill Head, local operator, said his allocation will be increased for April, but said his company's representatives are not particularly optimistic about the future.

"They don't know," he said, "or if they do they won't tell you."

He received a certificate of physical therapy from the University of Texas Southwestern School of Medicine in 1972. He was a member of Lambda Chi Alpha social fraternity at WTSU. He is now a resident of Lubbock.

The next meeting of the club will be April 24 with Mrs. Pete Leavitt giving a blender demonstration after a covered dish luncheon.

The club will sponsor a fun day April 1.

Alpha Theta Delta Meets In Grimes' Home

The tea will honor pledge Martha Bethel, and the new transfers, Linda Daniels, Vickie Stone, Sherlene Hayes and Donna Pittman.

Also at the meeting, officers for the coming year were elected. They are Mary Alice Hines, president; Sue Lewis, vice president; Mrs. Daniels, recording secretary; Mrs. Pittman, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Grimes, treasurer; Mrs. Hayes, city council delegate; and Mrs. Bethel, alternate delegate.

The program for the meeting was about art and was presented by Theresa Lewis. She then showed a film on the Valentine Ball.

Sue Hite Study Club Discusses Texas Youth

The Sue Hite Study Club, meeting recently in the home of Ermyle Cooper, featured a program entitled "Texas: Accent On Youth."

A selected quote, "I like to see a man proud of the place in which he lives, and I like to see a man live so that his place will be proud of him," was one of several given by Edith Priddy as she set the tone for the program.

Beulah Miller, program chairman, presented Zoe Henry, the discussion leader along with her assistants, Pauline Brown and Bonnie Hinger.

Discussion members pointed out that today we exist as a country with half the population under 25 years old, and the present generation is the first to grow up with "completely modern" parents reflecting many breaks with long time traditions. They said that young people are constantly being expected to live up to many stated values that are not theirs, and with less adult association, and that many do not accept the demands of adults but regress to a state of adolescence.

According to the club members, youth today seem to have become the greatest economic liability to the adults, because many do not become independent and push out on their own. They seem to live a life full of many choices but with few permanent ties.

Group members said that the open or closed marriage pattern is the choice offered young adults. Also, in a permissive, affluent society there is great striving for equality and responsibility but often little privacy. They said there seems to be a need for parents and youth to do more sharing, more listening, and more loving. One of the weaknesses seems to be an apparent inability to distinguish our needs from our greeds.

Following the meeting Mrs. Miller conducted a business meeting. Lois Prichard requested all to search for old yearbooks to complete the files for the 50 year celebration. Her committee has located 194 former members of the club.

Alma Perkins will serve as new vice president and program chairman for 1974-75. Ruth Henson, Scotty Cain and Mrs. Miller are slated to represent the club in Borger, April 2 for the Top O' Texas Federated Club Convention. Clara Lou Slack will be attending as a district board member. Mrs. Miller will give the club report.

Cheese balls, cookies, mints and coffee were furnished by co-hostesses Mrs. Slack, Mary Townsend, and Eunice Haggard.

On Monday, April 22, the Sue Hite Club will meet on the third floor of the Panhandle-Plains Historical Museum in the film room. Continuing the theme for the year of "America, What Time Is It?" a forum consisting of Betty Stoker, Audrey Jones and Mrs. Cain will present "We Vision Our Future." Hostesses will be Mrs. Henson, Virginia Crounse, Della Tolliver, Martha Goodman, Mrs. Brown and Margaret Cole.

TAXPAYERS-WAKE UP!

These were my views then;
these are my views now!

Since then, the City Commission has approved the expenditure of $18,913.67 to pay just for a "design," by a firm of architects, for what they impressively call "The Canyon City Complex."

They point out lamely that this money came from "a surplus" in the water funds.

The purpose of the City's operation of the water system is to serve the people; not to make a profit. Having a big surplus on hand, why didn't they reduce the water rates to help the 2,097 Canyon water-users struggling to pay their taxes and bills, instead of drawing up plans to build a million dollar "Complex?" Yes! "Complex!"

In an article in The Amarillo Globe News of February 1974, J. C. Lilly, director of finance for the City of Amarillo is quoted as saying:

"The amount a city receives in revenue sharing funds depends upon, in part, the amount it collects in property taxes. If you cut taxes, you reduce the amount you receive in revenue sharing funds." (My underlining.)

Can anything be simpler!!! Or more certain to increase our bills until every tax-payer goes broke. For all these funds come out of your pocket and mine who work and pay, and pay and pay!

There are definite departments which need adequate facilities. And yet the present City Commission doesn't even think those who pay the bill should even have the right to vote on a million dollar "complex." I say they should

I believe in hard work and frugality. I'm anxious to do my part for Canyon. I will appreciate your vote April 2, 1974 for The Canyon City Commission.

Developers Due County Appearance

Two developers will return to commissioners court Monday to present a plat and to discuss the new Randall County road construction policies.

Commissioners meet at 1 p.m. in the courthouse.

Horace Dwight, developer of McCormick Estates in the north part of the county, will again present a plat for his development after commissioners declined to accept the plat last week.

Dwight has been before the court several times since last fall concerning road paving matters. He got into heated discussion last week with commissioners over paving.

W.C. Roberts, an Amarillo developer, will talk with commissioners also about their new road policies which outline in minute detail the actions a developer must take if he wants his roads maintained by the county.

The remainder of Monday's agenda is light with routine equipment requests and a resolution to call the May 2 primary elections scheduled.

Arts And Entertainment

Thru The Looking Glass

By ANN MELIN

"I remember one morning I got up very early to catch a bus from Amarillo back to Canyon — I sat up in front with the driver, because the smell of whiskey and cigars in back was too awful — and we saw the most extraordinary sunrise. When we got to Canyon, I thought maybe that was something I could paint. It was really what started me painting again."

Georgia O'Keeffe in an interview for the New Yorker, March 4 issue

At 86, Georgia O'Keeffe is considered by many to be America's greatest living artist.

Reams have already been written about the woman and her work. Some writers have approached O'Keeffe through her art, attempting to understand the woman as revealed in her work. Others have made pilgrimages to one or the other of her homes in the village of Abiquiu, N.M. or on Ghost Ranch. A person of solitary persuasion, O'Keeffe admits some, rejects others.

Despite all that has been written about her, Georgia O'Keeffe remains a mystery. Her inscrutability is part of the reason why so many try to take it upon themselves to attempt the definitive article about the woman. To date, no one has succeeded.

When I first read about O'Keeffe four years ago and discovered that she was a former art department head at West Texas State University, I knew sooner or later something was going to have to be written about her in Canyon. By some perverse irony, the first and only woman to become American art history in her own time was a virtual nonentity in the region she herself has credited with being her inspiration to "paint again."

It would be my guess that the majority of Canyon residents have never heard of O'Keeffe. Those who by chance saw her picture on the cover of Life in 1968 or glanced, perhaps, at any of hundreds of articles about her in the nation's major publications, might hear her name and say, "Oh, yea, that's the old woman that paints the bones."

She does have a following of fans at West Texas State University. The current issue of the New Yorker which features a long article on O'Keeffe has currently been circulating among this circle and now lies on my desk. The remarkable thing about this latest O'Keeffe story is that for the first time, she speaks openly and directly of her experiences in the Amarillo-Canyon area. She does more than that. She says that this land — exoriated by so many outlanders for its barren, flat monotony — captured her own imagination to the extent of inspiring her to capture its ineffable beauty on canvas.

Perhaps the reason O'Keeffe's work is considered "unorthodox" by so many lies in the fact that the woman had to search for a different aesthetic of beauty to govern her painting. In every sense, O'Keeffe has been a lone wolf in the art world. From the beginning, she seems to have been intoxicated with the beauty of the very things about the Southwest that have repelled countless others.

O'Keeffe first discovered the cattle bones that have become her trademark when she was living in the Amarillo-Canyon area. In the New Yorker article, she describes the same scene described by Canyon's oldest living resident, Joe Black, in an interview with the man which appeared recently in the News. O'Keeffe, like Black, recalled the days when "you could see the cattle coming in across the range for days at a time."

For some reason it was not the rugged Panhandle cattleman or his ocean of white-faced cattle that compelled O'Keeffe's imagination. Looking for an essential part of the land to take back with her when she returned to the East, she chose the bleached cattle bones that populated the plains at the time. O'Keeffe saw something in the bones that old Panhandle ranchers may never have noticed themselves, but might understand better than most of O'Keeffe's fans when she explains it in a Life article:

"To me they (the skulls) are as beautiful as anything I know. To me they are strangely more living than the animals walking around — hair, eyes and all, with their tails switching. The bones seem to cut sharply to the center of something that is keenly alive on the desert even though it is vast and empty and untouchable — and knows no kindness with all its beauty."

So little-known is O'Keeffe and her work in the Canyon area that when one happens on someone in the city who knows of her, it's because they KNOW her.

Mrs. T.V. Reeves, a long-time resident in the community, knows Georgia O'Keeffe. They were young together. Mrs.

Reeves said she didn't know how or why O'Keeffe came to leave her home in the kinder, wheat-farming country of southern Wisconsin to come to the Texas plains. But O'Keeffe came here and all who knew her in those early days tell of the woman's strange fascination with the land.

Mrs. Reeves recalls a particular day when she, her husband and O'Keeffe were climbing up a craggy cliff in the Palo Duro Canyon. O'Keeffe was trailing behind the Reeves when suddenly she let out a terrific whoop. "We were scared to death. We thought she was falling," Mrs. Reeves remembered. O'Keeffe quashed their fears when she exclaimed, "I can't help it — it's all so beautiful!"

In a community as staid as Canyon was in the World War I era, Georgia O'Keeffe must have been considered something of a bohemian. She apparently came to the bustling little cowtown for different reasons than most who settled here.

One of seven children, O'Keeffe was born on a Wisconsin farm, later moving to Virginia. She studied art in Chicago and New York and came to West Texas Normal College to teach only after being fired by the innovative art concepts of one of her own instructors, Arthur Dow.

From 1913 to 1916, O'Keeffe served as supervisor of arts in the Amarillo Public Schools. She later joined the faculty at West Texas, serving as art department head from 1916-1918.

While in Canyon, she roomed at the home of Mrs. D.A. Shirley. Asked for her recollections of O'Keeffe, Mrs. Shirley was loathe to give them.

"She wouldn't like for me to talk about her. She was a private person. I let her talk to me whenever she wanted to talk to me. The rest of the time I didn't bother her. . . I just know she'd hate the idea of a story being written about her."

Mrs. Reeves seemed to hold the same opinion of O'Keeffe — that her artist friend hates publicity and to speak freely about their relationship would somehow be a grievous breach of friendship. The Canyon woman has received several letters recently from all over the United States. Art historians, graduate students and others are asking Mrs. Reeves for information regarding O'Keeffe's Canyon years.

Puzzled and rather bewildered by the reluctance of the Canyon women to talk of their famous friend, I decided to write a letter to O'Keeffe requesting an interview, a picture, or anything that would come straight from her.

I told Mrs. Reeves of the letter I sent to O'Keeffe and she said simply, "She won't answer it." Mrs. Reeves was correct in her prediction until this week.

Perhaps out of compassion, Mrs. Reeves told me there was one thing she did remember about O'Keeffe that she would be willing to tell me if I'd come over to her house one afternoon. I detected urgency in her voice, so I dropped everything and went.

Mrs. Reeves told me that she did remember O'Keeffe telling her that it was the years spent in the Texas Panhandle which influenced her to eventually move to New Mexico. She also told me of the day in the Palo Duro when the young O'Keeffe yelped with joy at the beauty of the Canyon.

The mystery of O'Keeffe lies in the question of why her Canyon years influenced her to live in New Mexico, not Canyon.

O'Keeffe herself once indicated a desire to live in this region. In an interview with the artist which appeared in a New Mexico magazine O'Keeffe said that "sometimes when the plane flies over Texas, and I see those plains below, I think I want to get off right there — and stay!"

But she has not returned to the Texas plains. Perhaps she never will. At this time, she lives in stark simplicity, dividing her time between an adobe home in Abiquiu, N.M. and a desert ranch to the north. Reading of her austere life style, I've often wondered about the reasons for her self-imposed exile, if that indeed is what it is.

Four years ago I decided a story needed to be written here about Georgia O'Keeffe. A few months ago when my letter to her went unanswered, I determined that I was not going to be the one to have to write that story. After getting so close to what I believed to be some basic answers to the enigma of the woman, I backed off in fear.

What brought me back to the source was the recent interview with O'Keeffe in the New Yorker. I was struck by her statement about the bus ride from Amarillo to Canyon and how she regarded it as a threshold in her life.

As one of hundreds of Amarilloans who have made the daily ride from Amarillo to Canyon, I was amazed to find that I shared this experience with the world's most famous woman artist. I was amazed to discover that all who have ever made the trip from Amarillo to Canyon have shared this experience with O'Keeffe.

The only difference is that the Amarillo-Canyon commuter knows what lies between the two towns. Georgia O'Keeffe saw what lies between them. WTSU Artist-in-residence John Pelsu clarified this when he told students that a "primitive artist paints something because he knows it is there. A professional artist paints what he sees to be there." O'Keeffe, the consummate artist, paints what she sees.

The entire time she resided in the Panhandle, O'Keeffe must have been regarded by the townspeople as an outsider. According to Mrs. Reeves, the artist always wore black frocks with immaculate white collars. On the out-of-town excursions that she loved so much, O'Keeffe would don tweeds, Mrs. Reeves said. Canyon City probably seemed very backward to one who was accustomed to running in the sophisticated art circles of the East. O'Keeffe thirsted for news from the "outside world." Mrs. Reeves says she recalls coming home to find the young O'Keeffe sprawled on her living room floor, surrounded by newspapers and magazines, taking it all in.

There is a good deal of controversy about how O'Keeffe came to leave Canyon. Some say the artists' opposition to World War I, an opposition she may have put her in the red with university officials and townfolk. One of her Canyon friends vehemently denies allegations of her possible dismissal from WTSU, however, calling the rumor a "dirty lie." The Canyon woman stated flatly that "Georgia quit her job because of illness."

The New Yorker interview with O'Keeffe seems to be the only story written to date in which the artist goes into any detail about her Canyon years. Like her Canyon friends, she has tended to be silent about those years.

It might seem a ludicrous claim to many who will read this to say that O'Keeffe's brief sojourn in this city was what compelled her to paint. Quantitatively, two years seem like a drop in the bucket. But in qualitative terms, O'Keeffe's stay here must have had an incalculable effect on her life.

O'Keeffe's relationship with the Panhandle terrain was and is as intimate as that of the most wind-beaten old rancher in Byrd's Recreation Club. But how alien O'Keeffe must have seemed to that rancher 55 years ago, what with her funny notions about art and life! And how alien that rancher must have seemed to O'Keeffe, with his dirty cigars and brusque ways.

She left Texas and became a famous painter. Maybe she saw it as "destiny." She could never be a part of the Canyon community because she couldn't accept the people and they probably wouldn't have accepted her. Unable to "know" the Panhandle, she contented herself with "seeing" it as an artist.

By coincidence, I had an occasion recently to take the same morning bus ride that O'Keeffe took over 50 years ago — the bus ride that changed the course of her life. When I got to the office, I wrote O'Keeffe yet another letter, telling her of the experience:

Dear Miss O'Keeffe, I usually hitch a ride with a girlfriend to come to Canyon in the morning, but today she didn't come. I took the bus. I arrived at the station carrying a copy of the 1968 Life magazine article about you, a copy of this month's issue of the New Yorker, and a sheaf of blank paper on which I was to have written a story about you last night, but never got around to it.

I thought the bus was to leave at 8:10 a.m., but I was mistaken. The next bus to Canyon was not leaving until 9:45 a.m. All I could do was wait. A young girl in blue jeans smiled at me and I smiled back. She asked where I was headed and I told her I was just going to work. I asked where she was headed and she said she was going to Colorado. She got to talking to me about love and life and friendship and happiness. She missed her bus. She said it was OK, though, because she'd take a bus to Utah at 8:45 p.m. I told her to come to work with me and bid her time until evening. She agreed. But while we were waiting for my bus to Canyon to arrive, another bus came that was leaving for New York. She just figured she'd go to New York. I told her not to forget me. She said "I won't forget."

After her bus pulled out of the station, I opened the New Yorker to read the story about you over again. Seated behind me were two Chicano women and three very small children. The children were filled with energy and laughter. The women looked tired and fatigued. One of the children burst suddenly into tears, as children will often do. I looked at the child and said in my rotten Spanish "No llores, chiquita." Maybe that wasn't correct Spanish, but the message got through to the child. She ceased crying and beamed like a tiny angel. Bolstered by my success with the child, I attempted my academic Spanish on the mother. "Adonde va, Senora?" I asked. The woman looked at me, a bit puzzled. She told me she was going to Hereford to visit her father. I gathered her father was a migrant laborer. I asked where she was from. She was from Dallas. "Then you must be very tired," I said. She smiled and said "Yes, what with the children and all." I told her her children seemed very happy. She looked at the little ones and just smiled.

The Chicanos were to leave on the same bus as me. I noticed a young black woman watching us during this entire interlude. When the bus pulled up to the station, she approached me and asked where I was going. I told her I was going to work. She told me she was going to Ruidoso to pick up her two-year-old child whom she missed very much. She, too, was from Amarillo and would be returning to the city the same day. We decided we'd sit together and find out how we both had been spending our lives in the same city. We were talking away when a young man passed down the aisle. I caught a glimpse of the New York Times he was carrying and asked if I might look and see what the news from NYC was today. He said he'd just left NYC a couple of days ago, and he could tell me how it was. "Just like it's always been," he said. He was a student at Eastern New Mexico University at Portales. He was a Long Islander, going to school in the Southwest because he said it was cheaper. I told him my father was from Brooklyn and took a degree from Eastern New Mexico University, just as this boy was planning to do, only for different reasons.

The bus pulled away from the station. The Long Island boy was seated at my right, across the aisle. The black girl was to my left. The Chicanos were seated directly behind me, the children climbing all over the seats.

At this time, I held up the Life magazine with your picture on the front. I told the people that you were a world famous artist and that right here in the New Yorker magazine you said that the very same trip we were making to Canyon once may have inspired you to paint. I opened the magazine and read your words to the people on the bus. I told them a lot of people didn't think the Panhandle was anything but ugly, but that there must be something of beauty in it if it could have sparked such emotion in America's greatest woman artist.

The bus rolled down the expressway, past the Amarillo city limits and onto the open road. We were engulfed in all that infinity of blue sky and rolling plains.

After I read your words, the people on the bus looked out their windows, almost as if performing some kind of religious service. (I mean there was something close to reverence in their faces).

Maybe I'm stretching things a bit, but I've decided that what happened among these people on this bus was something akin to what you felt when you saw the sunrise between Amarillo and Canyon. It was an act of SEEING.

Respectfully,
Ann Melin

A Buffalo Lake employee looks out over the dry lake bed from atop the dike which is being constructed to bisect the lake. The dike will contain water at the south end of the lake so water will be available for ducks and geese. The dike, when finished, should be between 8 and 12 feet in height.

Candidate For City Commissioner,

Place 3

Answers Your Questions

* Why do I seek reelection for this office? "My answer is that I feel that each citizen has an obligation to participate in his community's activities. It is my belief that I can best serve my community in this manner."

* Why do I think the city needs a new city hall, library, police station and fire station? "The existing facilities are simply no longer adequate for a growing, thriving community such as ours. They are crowded, outdated, inconvenient for the public and expensive to maintain. The citizens of Canyon (present and future) certainly deserve better facilities while funding is available."

* What about a public vote on such an important issue? "Your city commission has never said they didn't want this issue to come to a vote. This decision has not been made at this time because we do not know the cost or have the final details to work with. I do feel that it is an urgent matter because we all know building costs are going up each day."

* Can we afford an expenditure of such a large amount of money? "Not only can we afford it, but it appears that if we are ever going to build such a facility, the timing is right for now! Federal revenue sharing funds are available for the first time in history. Through careful management of the city's monetary affairs, we now have in excess of $800,000 available for use on this project . . . and this is without sacrificing any of the present city functions or raising taxes!"

* I'd like to encourage everybody to vote on Tuesday, April 2. If I am elected, I am willing to work for you, all the citizens of Canyon, for the next two years . . . Building Canyon!

Mary Stone (portrayed by Shelley Hamrick) sings of her anxiety over the welfare of her husband, who's made a fateful deal with Old Nick in "The Devil and Daniel Webster," in production this week along with another opera, "The Old Maid and The Thief." Production times are 8 p.m. Thursday and Friday in the West Texas State University Fine Arts Theatre.

Frosh Courses Now Available To High Schoolers

The challenge of college freshman courses is now available to academically talented high school students the summer before their senior year at West Texas State University.

"We want to give the student a chance to do a little more with his summers," said Don Cates, WTSU registrar. "Those with proven academic ability and recommendations from their principals will be selected to take freshman level courses here at WT during the summer or whenever it does not conflict with their high school obligations."

Talk On Puppets Due Presentation

A puppet is more than a children's toy — the delight it elicits when imitating human speech, gestures and other qualities makes it an ideal tool for instruction.

"Puppetry, A Vehicle for Learning" will be presented Monday at the Hall County Unit meeting of the Texas State Teachers Association at Valley High School, Turkey, Texas.

Presenting the lecture is Dr. Enid Bates, professor of elementary education at West Texas State University, at the 7 p.m. dinner meeting.

Dr. Bates will discuss puppetry as a means of providing enjoyment, literature enrichment, the development of oral language, speech correction, self-concept enhancement and values clarification from kindergarten to grade 12.

"A puppet is any facade that facilitates communication," the professor noted. Her presentation will include a puppet display, a slide show and a demonstration.

the City of Amarillo for possible use of Lake Meredith water in the future.

Sykes said he favors continued efforts to secure further water rights and would also favor an approach to Amarillo for securing Lake Meredith water.

Industrial Growth

The four candidates were in agreement concerning the role the city commission should play in attracting industry to the community.

They all agreed that the city should not become involved in giving special favors to industries to locate here.

And, they agreed that industries which might be interested in Canyon would find enough pluses in the community that further enticements wouldn't be necessary.

Sykes said the climate created by the commission itself in providing a favorable atmosphere for industrial development could help attract industry.

Other Issues

On other issues raised by the candidates themselves, Sykes said information should be gathered to see if election of city commissioners could be accomplished on a precinct basis rather than an at-large basis so more areas of town would have representation.

He said he would favor dividing the town into precincts for the election of city commissioners.

Mrs. Thompson said she feels the commission should use funds to help promote West Texas State University.

While the final grade is immediately put on record, Cates said, "the student will not have his credit apply to his degree until he shows proof of high school graduation."

A feature of the WT program is that once the student graduates, his WT credit can be transferred to the institution of his choice.

Cates also described the new WT program as one "designed to preserve a close working relationship with secondary schools."

"The University insists that students participating in this program complete the curricular and extra-curricular programs of their high school," Cates noted.

The students will be treated as entering freshmen, he stated, with special provision for exploratory efforts to make the United States self-sufficient.

"I submit the oil companies are best prepared to generate those funds and do that job," Phillips said. "So Congress should be concerned with oil profits from the standpoint of generating an oil policy that will see profits directed to solve our energy problems."

The amount of money which will be needed to explore for future oil will be enormous, Phillips said.

The National Petroleum Council, he said, has estimated that over the next decade $100 billion will be needed to achieve maximum development of oil resources.

"Obviously, industry profits must continue to improve if we're to be expected to do the job," he said. "If given the proper economic and political climate we can and will do the job."

In helping create that climate, Phillips suggested the nation's most influential congressmen and senators begin telling the people that if they want energy they must pay for it rather than concentrating on some tangent of the crisis and focusing adverse attention on the industry's efforts.

Phillips warned that in the near-panic environment of Washington, many advocates of socialism are gaining ground in calling for nationalization of the oil industry.

Rather than calling for more control, Phillips believes the advocates of the free-enterprise system must call for less government control over the oil industry.

"If there's a conspiracy, it's not among the people who produce the oil, but those who oppose the free-enterprise system," he charged. "If government action hurts rather than helps the industry then the industry won't be able to supply the fuel."

Phillips said it is his "firm conviction that if government eliminates its controls and lets the laws of supply and demand work, the oil industry could make this nation self-sufficient."

Petitions On City Hall Due Scrutiny

Petitions bearing more than 200 signatures will be considered by Canyon City Commissioners Tuesday night. The petitions call for an election on the controversial city hall complex construction.

The petitions were turned in last Wednesday and attested to by five local residents, including Dr. Donald Todd, Mrs. Rosaline Haley, Mrs. Mary Parker and Mrs. C. S. Thompson.

City Clerk Bob Moore spent Thursday and Friday checking the signatures on the petitions against voter registration lists to validate the petitions.

Commissioners must, under the city charter, consider Tuesday night whether or not to adopt the resolution included in the petitions.

The resolution calls for them to cease planning on the complex until a vote is taken.

Commissioners will meet at 7 p.m. Tuesday.

The petitions turned in Wednesday were the second set circulated in the city in recent weeks. An initial petition effort was rejected by commissioners who said the petition was not legal.

Black Power Defined At Afro Seminar

The definition of "Black Power" was the basic topic of discussion at the Black Culture seminar which opened the Afro-American Association's Black Recognition Week Monday at West Texas State University.

Guest speaker Rev. V.P. Perry of Amarillo examined the history of the black man from the beginning to the present time, stating that the white man has always considered the black man inferior in every way. Thus, blacks became ashamed of their heritage, of who they were, and tried all sorts of techniques to change their appearances.

"Now Blacks have stopped saying what the white man wants to hear and are saying what they feel," Rev. Perry said.

According to the New Zion minister, the phrase "Black Power" came from Stokely Carmichael of the Black Panthers organization as a result of a riot incident where several blacks were killed or injured. White people became afraid and resented the term "but no one bothered to ask the man what it meant," Rev. Perry said.

The people started forming their own definitions because when this phrase was voiced by a black man, "he struck a raw nerve in white people because they associated the chant with burning, looting, rioting and other militant-type ventures," Rev. Perry explained.

"The actual meaning behind Black Power is black people having a share in the decision-making of the country by whatever methods they deem necessary. They should be able to choose their own leaders and own and operate black businesses and cooperatives. This way blacks decide what's best for them," Rev. Perry suggested.

"Only Black people can free Black people. White people that join our struggle must become black," he said. "But they can best serve us by leaving our neighborhoods to go into their own. They should begin knocking at the doors of the white households, and rid that household of its prejudices, hatred and dominant power."

"Separation" is the only solution, Rev. Perry concluded.

Literary Awards Given Four City WTSU Students

Four West Texas State University students and a graduate assistant have won awards for their work in the WTSU literary magazine "Phoenix."

Susan Lindemann, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Lindemann of Umparger, won an award for her poetry. She is a graduate assistant in English.

Other winners were Viki Cooper, Eugene Young and E. Grace Brown for prose. Anna Ontiveros was a winner in the photography division of publications in the magazine.

Miss Cooper, an Elementary Education major, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Cooper, Jr. of 3505 Canon Drive. Young, English graduate and president of Sigma Tau Delta, lives at 2311 N. 3rd. Miss Brown, an Art major, resides at Canyon Creek Apartments.

Miss Ontiveros, a journalism major, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Cecilio Ontiveros of 2602 6th St.

Grant Funding Applications Now Available

The federally-funded Basic Opportunity Grant applications are now available through the West Texas State University Student Financial Aids offices and other public institutions.

"We hope that individuals who qualify will take the time to apply for the financial assistance they are entitled to receive," said Keith Winter, WTSU director of development. "West Texas State University and other institutions of higher learning are marvelous places for the development of their own potential."

"WT will have administered over $1 million in financial assistance this year to people anxious to improve both their life-styles and economic opportunities through post-high school work," he continued. For the Op portunity Grant, "all the student has to do is meet certain criteria and he is 'entitled' to a designated amount."

The Basic Educational Opportunity Grant Award is a grant and, unlike a loan, does not have to be repaid. It is estimated that during the 1974-75 academic year the awards will range between $50 and $800. They are available to students who began their post-high school education after April 1, 1973, and are attending on a full-time basis.

Eligibility for and the amount of the grant is based entirely on the financial resources of the applicant and his family need, which is determined through the submission of the financial statement application to the grant program.

Siesta Park Seeks Community Spirit

An enthusiastic move to provide an identity for an entity which cannot really identify with either the Amarillo or Canyon communities is underway at Siesta Mobile Home Park seven miles north of the city.

A full slate of community-oriented activities — including publication of its own newspaper — have spurred the residents of the park to identify with the park as their own community.

Under new manager R. T. Reeves, several residents of the park have formed a community association, a women's auxiliary and a volunteer fire department.

Earline Benham of the park said the efforts are aimed at involving the occupants of the park's more than 100 mobile homes in activities available to them.

Editor of the newspaper, Mrs. Benham said the efforts are having their effects as more and more residents are attending weekly meetings of the community association.

Mrs. Benham's first issue of The Plaza Quest came off the presses last week. In the future, the newspaper will run as a column in the Canyon News on Thursdays.

The first issue of the paper contains minutes from the recent community association meetings, stories on the women's auxiliary and the fire department and helpful items on mobile home living.

A primary focal point for effort at the park is funding for a fire truck for the fire department.

Noting that mobile home residents are familiar with the hazards of fire to mobile homes, Mrs. Benham said the department has found an antique fire truck in good condition which it hopes to purchase with funds raised through advertising in the newspaper and several other fund-raising efforts.

Amarillo and Canyon officials have been called on to lend assistance to the fire department in training. Even the women residents of the park will be trained in use of the fire equipment.

Of prime concern to those who attend the community association meetings are the usual kinds of problems which often grab the attention of city commissions in cities.

Loose dogs, litter and the fire protection of the citizenry have been items of concern in the association meetings, Mrs. Benham said.

The primary aim of the women's auxiliary is to raise money for fire department equipment.

Mrs. Benham said the efforts to involve the residents in community-oriented activities has changed Siesta from a loosely-knit group "just existing" before to an active group identifying with their community.

And, she says the efforts will continue.

formation for a future recommendation.

Louder said the results of the study are expected this summer and he expects the study to indicate the need for further salary increases for city employees.

Louder, in anticipation of the study results, has budgeted for a total 16 per cent increase for salaries in the new budget. That total includes the 8.8 per cent increase already given city employees.

Louder noted that while he considers the remaining 7 per cent a reasonable figure, he has no idea what the wage and salary study will reveal in the way of increase recommendations.

"We're shooting in the dark," he said. "We just don't know what it will be."

The city contracted through the PRPC for the study after living for more than five years under a wage and salary scale which Louder says is now out-moded.

Gian-Carlo Menotti's "The Old Maid and The Thief," is being presented under auspices of the WTSU Opera Workshop. Tickets, priced at $2.50 for adults and $1.50 for public school students and children, are now on sale in the Fine Arts Theatre box office.

Corporation Gives $650 To WT Dept.

The importance of industrial and business input into college curriculum was the theme of the 2nd annual West Texas State University Industrial Association banquet.

More than $650 was presented to the WT Industrial Education department by Cottingham Bearing Corporation president Bill Woods.

"How and Where Learning for Earning Occurs" was the keynote topic of McGraw-Hill Publishing Co. Editor Lawrence A. Walsh. Mr. Walsh has been with McGraw-Hill in New York for 20 years, now as their Career Education editor, and also serves as a consultant for the U.S. Office of Vocational Education.

Walsh began with Harris Poll statistics which revealed a 50 per cent drop in public confidence in business and in education since 1966.

"That about puts us along side Congress," Walsh said.

He credited that drop partially to the growing belief that businessmen should do more than produce and sell goods, but should also actively participate in correcting social ills.

"They're saying 'what's the use of economic growth when it creates a greater imbalance between prosperity and poverty,'" the editor stated.

Locals Win In Math Test

Walter Henson, Wade Wilhelm and Irene Mitchell of Canyon were among 16 students from area high schools to win honors at the annual Mathematics Contest held recently at West Texas State University.

From 21 high schools across the Panhandle, there were 219 contestants answering questions concerning algebra, geometry, basic logic and a few questions on trigonometry.

The awards were presented by WTSU President Lloyd Watkins.

Following the contest, counseling was made available to students who were interested in majoring in mathematics and a tour of the campus was given.

WTSU Prof To Lead Trip To Big Bend

Dr. Franklin Daugherty of West Texas State University will be one of the leaders of a field trip to the Big Bend area of Texas this week.

About 75 professional geologists will attend the trip, which will meet in San Antonio after the annual joint meeting of the American Association of Petroleum Geologists and the Society of Economic Mineralogists.

The 3½ day trip will take in some of the scenic wonders and spectacular geology of the Big Bend area. Geologists will study some of the unusual geologic features of the area.

Also leading the trip are Dr. Ross A. Maxwell of the University of Texas and Dr. John W. Dietrich, NASA.

British Scholar Norman Pittenger Speaks Of Christianity And The Panhandle

By ANN MELIN
Conceived in Canada, born in the United States and owing his loyalties, he says, to the United Kingdom, the Rev. Dr. Norman Pittenger retains his American citizenship because he doesn't want to waste time with the formalities of becoming what he already is — every inch the Englishman.

The Cambridge Divinity School professor was in the city this week as guest speaker on the Willson Lecture Series. His West Texas State University lectures on Tuesday and Wednesday explored "Love and Control In Human Sexuality." The lectures will be published in a book by the same title to be published in April by the United Church Press.

Educated at Oxford, and later at the New York Times City Desk, Pittenger chose teaching as his vocation in life. As a novice reporter in the 1920's, the Cambridge scholar covered two momentous events in American history. Very matter-of-factly, he stated that it was he who broke the story of the kidnapping of the Lindbergh baby in the New York Times.

"I happened to be visiting my parents in Princeton at the time. It was an accident, really. The news came over the AP wire in New York that Lindbergh had informed the police of the kidnapping. The city desk called me in Princeton, six miles away from the Lindbergh farm, and told me to go out there. I was with the Lindberghs, covering the story, until the Times hired a reputable journalist to take over the subsequent coverage."

As a young New York Times reporter, Pittenger also covered the heated battle between modernists and fundamentalists within the Christian Church. By far, his peripheral involvement in this epochal controversy made far more impact on the course of Pittenger's life than the chronicling of a horrendous tragedy in the lives of one of America's most famous families.

Pittenger's WTSU appearance this week marked the scholar's third visit to the Texas Panhandle. The scholar says he likes the people of this region. They are warm, generous, friendly and kind, he says.

"But some of their ideas, I abominate," Pittenger says. The august professor was highly concerned that his Panhandle "hosts" might get the wrong idea about his opposition to certain aspects of their Bible Belt brand of Protestantism which he says embodies a kind of "conservatism" that is peculiar to this region. He lamented what he called the peculiar American tendency to "assume when you attack their opinions, you are attacking them personally."

"But I do believe that the attitude of the people of this region toward the Bible is unlike that which you find in the rest of the Christian world," Pittenger said.

As an "outsider," and a "guest" in the Texas Panhandle, Pittenger says he does not feel it his duty to come in and try to alter the firmly-held beliefs of the people of this region. If change is to come, he says, it must come from "inside."

In a region where many regard "permissiveness" and "immorality" to be synonymous, some of Pittenger's statements, when taken outside of their frame of reference, must have sounded peculiarly alien to many who listened to his lectures this week.

His assertion that true morality can exist "only in a permissive society" may well have raised the hair of some of his listeners of fundamentalist persuasion.

Explaining his position, Pittenger said that in societies in which people are "good" because the law tells them to be "good or else," there exists no genuine responsibility. "One goes through the motions like a puppet manipulated by a puppeteer," Pittenger said.

"But MORALITY — if it has any meaning at all in western society — is a CHOOSING amongst possibilities. Genuine morality is predicated on choosing good over evil," Pittenger said.

Choosing "good" with a view toward an eventual "reward in heaven" is, in Pittenger's way of thinking, "not morality but clever business technique," comparable, perhaps to "investing in the stock market."

Charting one's life upon the dos and don'ts of the Bible can also be a capricious affair, according to Pittenger. For instance, the Bible absolutely forbids the consuming of milk and lamb together. Have all who may have performed this act been guilty of sin?

In his talks with WTSU students, Pittenger remarked that many seemed to be going through a period of great disturbance.

Steeped in the fundamentalism of the region, many WTSU students are currently going through a time in their lives when they "have to adjust their old point of view (fundamentalist Christianity) to the 'New Learning' they are being exposed to at the university."

"They are faced with this dilemma and they are very disturbed by it," Pittenger said.

The Cambridge scholar, who maintains not only that change must come from within, but that it must come gradually, says it's "truly admirable that they (the WT students) are disturbed."

"In all true faiths there is a large element of agnosticism," he explained.

If a religion claims to have all the answers, Pittenger says, it cannot be called a "faith." It would have to be called "knowledge."

Is 44¢ a good price to start a 78 piece set of imported china?

It is when it's our "Night Blossom" imported china. This beautiful translucent china 5-piece place setting - dinner plate, luncheon plate, bread and butter plate, cup and saucer - is a $5.95 value. . . and part of an entire set you can own at great savings, and buy over a period of 15 weeks.

Start with this special:

With every food purchase of $3.00 or more this week, you can buy the feature piece of the week for 44c. The first featured piece will be the large formal dinner plate. (If your food purchase comes to $12.00, for example, you can buy four dinner plates at only 44c each.)

Fifteen weeks of specials. Each week for the next 15 weeks, we will offer feature pieces of this lovely china at prices that will save you as much as one-half or more, so you can build an entire service for 6, 8 or more.

Their heads are bursting with questions

The Columbia is bursting with answers.

Start their college education now with the encyclopedia created right on a college campus.

It's the most important gift you can give your children today. In this complicated, competitive world, education is the only sure road to success. Yet statistics show that only 7 of every 10 grade schoolers will finish high school. Only 2 finish college.

Will your child be one of those?

Yes, if you take positive steps. If you instill the right habits, provide the right tools. A first-rate encyclopedia right in the home is one of the best possible tools. And the Illustrated Columbia Encyclopedia in 22 volumes is a first-rate encyclopedia.

The text of the Columbia was created right on a college campus. It was compiled by over 200 experts and published by special arrangements with the Columbia University Press. It has been acclaimed by educational leaders everywhere.

More than 75,000 accurate, lively articles cover everything your children will need to know for school assignments, from the elementary level right through high school and college. And the articles are highlighted by over 7000 illustrations, more than 1000 in full color.

But the Columbia does more than just cover academic needs. It deals with the pressing problems of the day—from narcotics addiction to the place of marriage in society.

It answers tough questions with real facts.

An informed child is more likely to ward off trouble than an uninformed child. An educated person is more likely to succeed. Give your children their chance at success. Start building your set of the Illustrated Columbia Encyclopedia today.

Exciting illustrations that add a dramatic dimension to the text.

Alphabetically-listed articles, in clear, legible type. Easy to find. Easy to read.

Handsome, durable, library-style bindings you'll be proud to display.
